lines; within the next year, an imposing block of buildings, providing shops and offices will rise.

It will be connected to Hobson Street by an artistically-designed crescent and colonnade of 12 shops which will allow vehicles to pass freely in the middle of Sussex Street.

Art exhibition attracts great interest – 1909

MR W.B. Redfarn's unique collection of watercolour drawings of old Cambridge excited great interest.

In 1875, he started to record places of bygone and antiquarian interest which, but for his timely intervention, would have been lost for ever.

A good many had now entirely disappeared including two houses in Shelley Row which were the residence of Oliver Cromwell during the Civil War. They were panelled with two handsome fireplaces which he had moved to his own house.

Old houses in Petty Cury were the most striking and perfect places which should never have been pulled down while parts of the Falcon Yard had remained until the last few years.
